Story by CHARLES
BIRD

and the LITTLE WISE GUYS

THE CRIMINAL ALWAYS SCREAMS LOUDEST FOR A SQUARE DEAL, YET HE NEVER GAVE HIMSELF A SQUARE DEAL MUCH LESS HIS FELLOWMEN! HE LAUGHS AT US SQUARE SHOOTING, FAIR PLAYING CITIZENS, AND CALLS US NAMES SUCH AS 'ALICES' 'BOOBIES', 'FLATHEADS', 'PIGS', 'ROACHES', 'MONKEYS', 'CLOWNS', 'SUCKERS', 'CHUMPS', 'GOOFERS', 'FISHES', 'LAMBS', 'LOBSTERS', 'EASY MARKS', 'PATBY'S', 'GLASS-JAWS', 'PUSH-OVERS', 'SET-UPS', AND 'SOFT TOUCHES'. THESE WORDS COME FROM AN AUTHENTIC UNDERWORLD DICTIONARY!

ALL CRIMINALS SPEND THEIR LIVES LAUGHING AND SNEERING AT US; BUT WHEN THEY ARE CAUGHT, THEY WANT A SQUARE DEAL, AND A BREAK; AN EASY RAP! THIS DARE-DEVIL STORY TELLS YOU HOW THE SUCKER REALLY IS!

Charles Bird

Dear Sirs:
 When Bart Hill was young, who he was,
 and athletic like he is now? How did he learn to throw his boomerang? And that costume, what it made of; where'd he get it, and what for? How about drawing a story that will satisfy my curiosity?
 Yours truly,
 Arthur Levine

 Dear Mr. Biro
 When your story, "How Daredevil came to be" was printed, I was too young to read comic books. I tried to find that book among my friends, but they didn't have
 it. Would you please print
 it again? Your fan,
 Arthur Burrell

Please print "How Daredevil came to be"
 over again. All my friends think you
 should do this truly yours
 Mary Whelan

 Dear Sirs,
 how did Dare Devil
 start to fight crime?
 truly yours,

Wouldn't it be a good idea for you to reprint the original story of how Daredevil came to be? It would help readers to become more familiar with Daredevil.

Yours truly

Dear Editors — April 16, '46
 The story of how Daredevil became will always remain in my memory, but by word, never told. Every reading of it once more brings back many of my friends
 from the same old days.
 Please re-print that story?

Thanks

TOO MANY CLUES

A Crimebuster Story

By DICK FRENCH

"H'YA, Crandell," said the voice on the phone, "How's the super-sleuth today?"

"Hello, Garrett. What can I do for you—arrest one of the horses you lost money on?" Inspector Crandell's voice was cold.

"Always kidding, huh?" said Barney Garrett. "Look, Crandell, I know you don't go for me much, but this is kinda serious. You don't wanna see another murder committed, do you?"

Instantly Crandell was alert. As he spoke, he glanced at the interested face of Crimebuster, perched on the edge of his desk. "Murder, you say," he murmured softly. "Maybe you'd better tell me all about it. Whose murder?"

"Mine, Crandell—that's why I'm interested," laughed Garrett. "No kidding—I got a hunch somebody's out to get me, and I figured maybe you could help me out. I'll tell ya how it is. I owe a few grand, and—wait a second, somebody's comin' in—"

Crandell waited impatiently for a moment, and then suddenly stiffened in his chair, as Garrett's shout came over the phone, easily heard in the quiet office.

"Don't—don't be a fool, baby! Put that down! Put down that—" There was a click, and silence.

The echoes of Garrett's voice still filled the room as Crimebuster leaped from the desk and headed for the door. "Come on, Crandell," he snapped as he ran. "Garrett's place is only a couple of blocks from here. Let's go!"

As the big police cruiser whirled up to the door of the swank apartment building, Crimebuster noted a pretty girl hurrying away in the gathering dark. "hmmm—there's a face I know. I wonder—" But his thoughts were lost as he and Crandell raced into the building and into the self-service elevator.

The body of Barney Garrett, lifelike except for the sightless, staring eyes sat upright in an easy chair before a huge, littered desk. A dark stain still spread slowly in the bright blue silk shirt, directly over his heart.

"He ain't been dead very long—still warm," said one of Crandell's policemen. "But he sure is now—very dead."

Crimebuster was poking among the papers on the desk. A puzzled frown creased his face as he stared at a pencilled scribbling on the edge of a scratch sheet. Wordlessly he handed it to Crandell, who read aloud. "Mona Marris shot Gar—that's all it says."

"Mona Marris," said Crimebuster thoughtfully, "is the girl we saw leaving here as we arrived. She's also an actress. I knew I recognized her from somewhere."

The big cop who had been examining Garrett's body broke in excitedly. "Mona Marris! Say chief—here's something you ought to know. A couple of hours ago Garrett and that comic, Harry Stoner, was in Mindy's Restaurant with this Marris dame. They had a brawl about something, and Garrett started slapping the girl around till a couple of waiters pulled him off. We got a call on it, but Marris wouldn't prosecute, so we let it go."

Crandell grinned. "Now this is the kind of case I like. Looks like a cinch. Have Mona Marris and Stoner picked up and bring 'em here, but quick."

Mona Marris was known to the theatre world for her radiant beauty, but she was anything but beautiful as she faced Inspector Crandell in Garrett's apartment an hour later, her face streaked with tears and terror in her big dark eyes.

Crandell's voice was cold, patient. "What's the use, Miss Marris? Why not tell us the truth? Look at the evidence," he said quietly. "You admit Garrett slapped you around in Mindy's, and that you screamed you'd kill him. We get a phone call from Garrett, and hear him call somebody baby—then we run over here and find him dead. We saw you leave here. And on top of all that, here's a note saying you did it. We checked the note with the pencil in Garrett's pocket, and it checks. He wrote it alright. Any jury in the world would convict you."

Harry Stoner laid a comforting hand on the girl's shoulder. He was a dark heavy set man in his forties, flashily dressed. "Honey, if you did do it, better tell the gentlemen. It will be much easier for you," he said.

Mona Marris whirled on him. "You too, Harry? You think I did it too!" Her voice broke as she repeated. "I didn't do it—I didn't. I've told you—he called me and said he'd pay me the money he owed me, and when I got here he was—like this!"

Crimebuster turned to Harry Stoner. "Let's have your version of the argument in Mindy's, just for the record," he said, "and try to remember exactly what everyone said."

Stoner frowned in concentration. "Well, near as I can remember, it was like this," he said. "Mona had loaned Barney a couple of thousand dollars a while back when he was on the rocks. Everybody knew he's just made a big killing, some thirty thousand or so, and she wanted her money back—but Barney kept stalling." Stoner launched into a swift imitation of Barney Garrett's voice. "Baby," he said, "you just let poppa hang on to that dough of yours! Old Barney knows what he's doin'. Coupla more weeks and you'll get it back doubled!" But Mona didn't like the idea, Stoner went on, and pretty soon she started making a scene, and Barney lost his temper and slapped her a couple of times. "Last I saw of her, she was sailing out the door screaming she'd kill him for slapping her in public."

Crimebuster looked steadily at Stoner for a long moment, then turned to Crandell. "Did you find any money when you searched Miss Marris? Or did your men find any in her apartment?" His eyes clung to Mona Marris as he spoke, but she hardly seemed to be listening. "She didn't have much time to dispose of any money—she was picked up twenty minutes after she left here."

Crandell frowned as he said, "No—no money. But she could have gotten rid of it somewhere. What about it?"

Crimebuster spoke slowly, "Crandell, you've known me quite a long time. I'm not the kind to make foolish statements. And I say that Miss Marris did not kill Garrett. Furthermore, if you'll take a chance on my advice, I know I can show you who the real killer is! You send someone to search Stoner's apartment for that thirty thousand dollars—in fact, search him right now! He may be just confident enough to have it with him."

Stoner, standing close to Garrett's body at the desk, began to sputter indignantly. "Why, you young upstart! Crandell, if you follow this fool's advice, I'll have you job! I've got influential friends—"

Crandell ignored him. "For a long moment he stared straight at Crimebuster, then, "Okay, boys—frisk him," he barked.

But as two of the officers turned towards Stoner, the two comedians, with astonishing speed, reached for the drawer of the desk. At his first move, Crimebuster flung himself into the air, flying across the desk in a swift lunge. There was a flash of steel in the fat man's hand, but instantly his wrist was grasped in a grip of iron, his throat in another. A flat automatic fell to the floor with a clatter, and a moment later Harry Stoner was writhing helplessly, pinned to the wall in Crimebuster's relentless grasp. As he struggled, the two policemen efficiently rifled his pockets. And a moment later one of them let out a long whistle as he gazed at the thick packet of thousand dollar bills in his hand.

Later that night, at Police Headquarters, Inspector Crandell took Crimebuster firmly by the shoulders and sat him in a big easy chair. "Now listen," he said, "I got the general drift of this thing from Stoner's confession. He knew that Garrett had thirty thousand dollars, and when Garrett had the fight with Mona Marris, Stoner figured he saw a way to get the money, and throw the blame on the girl. But what tipped you off to the whole phoney set-up?"

Crimebuster grinned as he said, "The old pitfall of the amateur killer, Crandell—too many clues. Stoner set the stage too well. First of all, that note. It said, 'Mona Marris shot Gar—'. Now no man, dying, would write that. He'd have said, Mona Marris shot me. And then the pencil. It checked with the writing in the note, but it was in Garrett's pocket! If he didn't have strength enough to finish the note, how could he put it back in his pocket?"

"Yeah—yeah, I see what you mean," said Crandell. "But what gave you the idea that Stoner did the job?"

"Stoner gave it to me himself," said Crimebuster. "Remember when he imitated Garrett's voice? When he did that, all the pieces fell into place. Stoner went up to Garrett's apartment and killed him. Then he fixed up the phony note, and phoned Mona Marris, disguising his voice to sound like Garrett, and asked her to come over to get her money. When he was sure she was coming, he phoned you, still in Garrett's voice, and planted the murder angle and the word baby. It was simple—but he messed it up with too many clues."

Crandell shook his head wearily. "What a business—and what will they think of next? Well, anyway it's over, thanks to you. Now I can relax again."

Crimebuster grinned as he headed for the door. "If I were you, my friend, I'd start thinking up some good alibis," he murmured. "Wait till your boys find out you were talking to a murderer over the phone five minutes after his crime, and about to offer him police protection from an imaginary killer!"

THIS IS YOUR PAGE

WHAT'S ON YOUR MIND?

$2⁰⁰ FOR EACH LETTER PUBLISHED $2⁰⁰

In every issue of DAREDEVIL COMICS this page is devoted to your opinions, ideas and suggestions. Since the conception of DAREDEVIL COMICS we have been guided by two ideals—first, the eradication of crime and, second, to give credit to the fearless detectives and officers of the law who daily risk their lives, that you and we may live in a more lawful society.

CHARLES BIRO and BOB WOOD, Editors.

To me DAREDEVIL COMICS really is the comic magazine that dared to be different. I have read numberless comics and none of them can come anywhere near comparing with DAREDEVIL. So all I can say is, thanks for bringing something new and different into the comic world.

Yours truly, Robert Jackson
135 Richards St., West Haven, Conn.

Though your letter reads like a paid-for testimonial, we're sure that it's sincere.

As a devoted reader, I want to tell you that I like DAREDEVIL because it's so real and human. My father, who is in the Army, said that DAREDEVIL is the most popular comic book in the service, so thanks for making a good book better.

Very truly yours, Stuart Brown
Chapin Ct., Northboro, Mass.

It's your kind of recognition that makes people aspire toward better things.

I like DAREDEVIL COMICS because you give credit to detectives and officers of the law, instead of to silly, make-believe men who go through keyholes, turn into fire, or fly through the air, etc. Keep up your good work.

Yours truly, Carl Eugene Lemme
1820 Bayard Park Drive, Evansville 14, Indiana

That's what we started out to do, and will continue to do so until the end of crime.

What a terrific, super-duper magazine. I never read and enjoyed a book as I do the one and only "DAREDEVIL." Man alive, he's what I call an American hero, coming straight from the shoulder of a Canadian, who is incidentally, me. Come on, Editors, keep up the dandy work.

Your fan, Lillian Irene White
329 Edwards Ave., The Pas, Manitoba, Canada

Thanks, we simply give the readers what we, ourselves, would enjoy.

Maybe I'm a cranky mother; at least I'm willing to confess when in error. I've been fussing about my boys reading comics. Since reading one of yours, I'm saying, "More power to you, and God's blessings on your efforts."

Sincerely, (Mrs.) Inez Sharp
930 Prospect St., Florence, Ala.

Your broad-minded words droppeth as the gentle rain from Heaven.

I have one complaint to make about DAREDEVIL COMICS. In my opinion, Dickie Dean's inventions are too fantastic, so I suggest you change it to a true story about crime heroes. How about it, editors, will you give it a thought?

Yours truly, Ronald Spenard
38 Parker Ave., Glenbrook, Conn.

Dickie Dean has a large following. His fan mail can attest to that, but since this is your opinion, you certainly have a right to air it here.

I have three growing boys as well as a Marine P.F.C. They read every issue of DAREDEVIL COMICS—Crimebuster, etc. I think this sort of reading helps them get the right slant on life. Too many magazines picture a villain as the really successful person.

Sincerely, Victor M. Prebor
So. Burlington, Vermont

We cherish your letter, which evidences that our efforts are aimed in the right direction, and the proof of the pudding tastes mighty good to us.

Hats off to your little giant publication. To DAREDEVIL COMICS goes credit and thanks from, I'm sure, all corners of America. During the war, many honest citizens realized that juvenile delinquency loomed as great a problem as defeating the enemy. Since the greater part of your reading audience is comprised of youngsters, you and others like you deserve large amounts of thanks for your published proofs to boys and girls that crime never did, does, or will ever pay.

Yours for peace, Henry S. Galus
164 Cedar Grove St., New Bedford, Mass.

It's gratifying to observe the opinions of one so well informed.
